Manual medical syringes, which are the subject of the present invention, generally have a barrel, which usually includes a means for the identification of a type and a serial number of the medical syringe, and which usually includes a plunger, which is used to expel a product from the barrel. Medical syringes are frequently reusable. Medical syringes are therefore often fitted with needle protection means, which can be either temporary means in the form of a cap, or means that can be adapted permanently to the syringe, either in the form of a sleeve or of a frame. One type of medical syringe that is known in the art is a dental syringe. Dental syringes are used to expel a dental product from a barrel and are usually used in the mouth or in the gums of a patient for dental treatment. The dental syringe may also include a needle protection means to protect the patient or the dental staff from the needle that is to be used for the dental treatment. Dental syringes of the prior art have generally had a sleeve that surrounds the barrel of the syringe and comprises a flange that can be fixed to the barrel and an internal sleeve that is fixed on the barrel, which internal sleeve comprises a closed thread for mating with an external thread on the barrel. The prior art has already described a dental syringe that comprises a needle protection means. The needle protection means comprises a longitudinal groove that is formed in the external wall of the barrel, and an insert sleeve that is fixed in the longitudinal groove and that comprises a longitudinal slot that is shaped to receive the needle. Another dental syringe is known in the art, which comprises a needle protection means that comprises a spring-loaded mechanism
