We are always glad to help you.“We will not call it ‘fossil fuels,’ because we want to change the debate in the United States, which is too focused on the environment. We call it ‘liquid fuels.’ Liquid fuels are going to be the fuel of the future. That is the conclusion of our study.” Economist and author Thomas L. Friedman, commenting on a report by the International Energy Agency: “... only 11% of the global energy supply currently comes from fossil fuels, so the future is pretty clean. Even if we were on the road to the apocalypse, there is no reason for us to do anything about it. We are not in a position of power.” “... the public should be made aware of the overwhelming long-term advantages of renewable energies. Such an effort can be done either by getting the government to start some of these projects or by helping various stakeholders raise private funds for these projects.” “... renewable energies are the way to go, and the sooner they get in the game, the more they will be able to play.”“With the new TCO Report, we believe that life science manufacturers and their suppliers can no longer afford to be overly cautious about the potential risks of pharmaceutical, biotechnology and medical device manufacturing.” – Dr. Michael Lucchesi, President, NACE The Greater Phoenix Business Times recently published an article, entitled “Pharma factory shutdown spells bad news for local economy,” that detailed the situation facing many areas of the greater Phoenix area that have been affected by the shortage of manufacturing capacity. The shortage of manufacturing capacity in the area is the result of many of the Phoenix area’s leading medical device manufacturers closing their doors and laying off hundreds of employees in the last five years. “The life science industry is a significant employer in the Phoenix area and I believe a key contributor to the area’s economic sustainability,” said Dr. Lucchesi. “The TCO Report is an example of the way that
